

What kind of baseboard is best for a hallway cabinet

Overview

Your main options for baseboard materials are MDF, wood, and PVC. Wood is usually preferred if you can afford high-quality material. Baseboards are planks that cover the length of the lowest part of the interior wall up to a door's lower joint. They take a beating over the years from vacuum cleaners, pets and the occasional kick to. Your baseboard choice depends on style, material, and ceiling height, with sculpted designs for traditional homes and flat profiles for modern spaces. Other options like PFJ, LDF, and less commonly used types of wood like poplar are also available. The gentle curve at the top creates a soft, friendly aesthetic that works well in casual, family-oriented spaces. Baseboards come in a wide array of profiles, or shapes, and many manufacturers make dozens of different options. Typically, these profiles don't.
